

Shannon S. Moultrie

Founder of The Conversation

Meet Shannon Moultrie, Founder of The Conversation, a platform that breaks away from the industry norm by sharing raw and audacious truths about life, trauma, and family dynamics. Shannon is an author, blogger, and a courageous voice advocating for others to share their stories safely. In her writings, Shannon exposes the harmful impact of the age-old saying, "What goes on in the house, stays in the house." She aims to dismantle this culture of secrecy that has allowed family predators to thrive. Her intentional approach creates a platform for individuals, both young and old, to speak up and contribute to a collective narrative that empowers future generations.

Shannon's journey to founding The Conversation is marked by a diverse career. From working in corporate finance in the United States and Aruba to obtaining a legal education at Emory Law School, she later became a practice administrator for law firms. Additionally, as a registered mediator with the Supreme Court of Georgia, Shannon has applied her knowledge, experience, and education to carve a niche for herself in the legal space.

Transitioning her skills into writing, communication, and teaching, Shannon focuses on healing from trauma, advocating for legal changes benefiting children, and addressing tough conversations head-on. Her work goes beyond words, impacting readers who find the courage to share their own stories inspired by her openness. Resilience defines Shannon's journey. Growing up in challenging circumstances, surrounded by family members engaged in detrimental behaviors, she defied expectations and pursued a path of value. Despite the odds, Shannon is a businesswoman, a legal expert, a speaker, a writer, an entrepreneur, and best of all, a mother! She's a walking testament that generational curses can be broken by an individual's actions and knowing their inherent worth.

Shannon's life story taught her the power of betting on herself. Opting not to take out loans or use credit cards, she invested her own money into The Conversation, allocating a percentage of every paycheck to support her venture. While she later explored grants to supplement overhead costs, Shannon was willing to step out on faith and take action to make changes for not only herself but others.
